

A UNIQUE INTERVIEW

Here, was a relic of primordial crust formed moments after the solar system was blown into being. Not that the dragon was aware of all this as he relaxed his reptilian tail under a BBC rug. In the mirror he organised his nasal holes to snort fire and breathe down walls, ready to do his party piece, if requested.

In the studio the interviewer was nervous; she had never spoken to a dragon before. So when the lights failed, the dragon jetted tongues of fire to improve everyone's sight. It worked, but at a price, and confirmed that a dragon is a health and safety risk.

John Vaughan, December 2008